Nutritional Needs - Week4

Calcium

Your daily dose of calcium—1,200 milligrams from low-fat dairy products, dark green vegetables and fortified orange juice and soy products—plays a key role during the second and third trimesters, when your baby's bone and tooth development reaches its peak.

Physical Development - Week4

Have you noticed your baby using his vocal chords in ways other than crying? He may coo and make "ahh" sounds this week, especially when he sees mom or dad. Babies learn by mimicking--so replay his sounds back to him. He not only loves the attention, but he's also finding out that his voice has power: he calls, you appear!

Abdominal Achiness

As your uterus expands during your pregnancy, you may experience "growing pains" around the middle, or what your OB-GYN calls round ligament pain. Many women start feeling it around week 14 of pregnancy, but it can strike at any time

WHAT DOES IT FEEL LIKE?

Round ligament pain is typically felt as achy, crampy or sharp sensations on one or both sides of the lower abdomen. You'll probably notice occasional round ligament pain more when you change positions suddenly or get up from sitting or lying down, or when you cough, sneeze or laugh. It may be brief or last for several hours (yet another mystery of pregnancy).
